About 200 pre-induction trainees received instruction for a two-week period during the summer. My kolkhoz supplied four or five young men a year. Most of the instruction was drill and rifle marksmanship. One reason that comparatively few received pre-induction training from the Voyenkommat was that many young people went into the labor reserve system and from there directly into the Army.

In towns and villages of the Ukraine, 50% of the population would welcome liberating parachutists; in the countryside, 70%. This is true although word has spread of NEVD tactics in the Volga German Republic in 1941. Agents speaking perfect German and wearing German uniforms sought protection in this area. Soviet authorities then inquired as to their whereabouts, and were told nothing. The entire Volga German population was resettled in remote areas.
